In some cases you will have given us all the information we have about you yourself. We may also hold information about you given to us by the person who referred you to us or passed on by the volunteer who helps you.

How long do we hold your information?

In summary we usually hold information about clients from the time you are referred, whilst we are helping you, and for 6-7 years after the date we last helped you. If you have been referred to us by someone else and we are unable to make any contact with you or you tell us you do not want us to help you and we have not given any help we will only keep your information for 1 year. Full details can be found in our ‘data retention policy’ which you can request from our main office (details below).

How will we use the information about you?

We will use the information we have about you to help you in the way you have asked. We will sometimes contact you to ask how the support we are giving you is going or for feedback to help improve our services. We may contact you to invite you to occasional events such as tea parties but you can let us know if you do not want us to do this. We will share relevant information we have about you with the volunteers who are helping you.

We will not pass on your information to anyone else without your permission except in the following situations:

- We may contact medial services, emergency services or social services if we are concerned you may be injured or are at risk of harm
- If we have next of kin information for you we may contact them if we are concerned about you unless you ask us not to
- If you have been referred to us by someone else we may contact them about the progress of the referral, to ask for more information or if you have decided you don't want our help. You can tell us if you don't want us to do this.
- If we are contacted by a next of kin or a referrer we will confirm what help we are giving you unless you have asked us not to.
